Quarterly fund commentary as at 30 June 2014

Following a pedestrian first quarter, during which it returned just 1.4% in USD terms, The MSCI World Index rose strongly during the second quarter, returning 5.1%. The synchronised economic growth in the developed countries continues, albeit at a below-par pace. The most recent estimate of Q1 GDP growth in the USA was quite a shock, coming in at -2.9%, reflecting the adverse impact of extreme weather conditions. More recent data releases have, however, been more encouraging, while the Fed's dovish stance should provide an underpin to the market. China appears to have averted a hard landing, but it remains to be seen whether the targeted growth of at least 7.5% will be achieved, or if this number will be closer to the 7.0% level. While Germany appears robust, the remainder of the euro zone is mixed, with the threat of deflation still hovering. To counter this, the ECB has introduced a number of measures in order to stimulate growth and stave off deflation. The backdrop of a deteriorating geo-political environment is cause for concern, as tensions in Ukraine, Iraq and the Gaza Strip remain. Global markets do not seem to have factored in any impact that may result from a major escalation of these tensions.

Emerging markets have weathered the storm arising from the tapering of the Fed's massive bond purchase program and, in most cases, have experienced an inflow of some of the funds that were previously withdrawn. Whether or not the recent rally in EM markets can continue is unclear, particularly given the muted outlook for resources.

Bond yields continued to decline in the second quarter, particularly in the euro zone where the spread on the debt of peripheral countries narrowed markedly. The Rand weakened against Sterling during the quarter, slipping to R18.17/GBP at the end of June 2014 from R17.56/GBP at the end of March 2014.

After a lengthy period during which they remained static, short term yields declined by between 10 and 20 basis points in June.

Investments will continue to be concentrated as close to the benchmark as possible, keeping duration at the short end of the mandated range.
